Panellists will share their different experiences of implementing the New Deal since it was endorsed at the Busan High Level Forum in 2011. They will reflect on how the New Deal can be used in contexts of conflict and fragility to enable countries to realise their SDG ambitions, and what needs to happen to make this a reality. They will focus on how the New Deal principles can be used to support country-owned transitions through 1) prioritising and sequencing of the SDGs in ways that take account of conflict and fragility; 2) promoting greater coherence and accountability between country-led planning, stakeholder consultation processes, and partner support; and 3) working to ensure results are sustainable.
